

Social Science Homework

Psychology

Understanding and recall of key experiments and theories are vital in A Level Psychology, therefore students will be required to complete tasks to underpin their classroom learning in preparation for future lessons. This will involve research, reading and detailed note taking so that students attend lessons with a foundation knowledge of important content that will be built upon and extended in class. Homework will also include consolidation tasks such as revision webinars to reinforce information learnt in lessons, and written pieces such as exam essays and exam style questions. Homework tasks will be set in order to complement and reinforce the learning taking place in lessons and to prepare pupils for assessments and examinations. Students will receive between one and two tasks per week. Students may also be set homework or revision activities to be completed throughout school holidays.

Law

Homework in Law will include significant extended reading and detailed note making that supports essential case study information in preparation for future lessons. Detailed knowledge of these cases is required for the A Level and students will be directed to a variety of Law resources that outline important cases. It will also include completing key term tasks, written pieces such as essays and exam questions. Homework tasks will be set in order to reinforce and consolidate the learning taking place in lessons and to prepare pupils for assessments and examinations. Students will receive between one and two tasks per week. Students may also be set homework or revision activities to be completed throughout school holidays.

Criminology

Homework in criminology will be based around preparation for the unit assessments. Students will be required to read and make notes on various areas of theory, research and case studies to support learning in previous lessons and prepare for future lessons. Students will be asked to complete detailed notes for each assessment criteria using the structure provided in lessons. Students will also be asked to research case studies that support assessment criteria and complete exam questions in preparation for the written exam. Students will receive between one and two tasks per week. Students may also be set homework or revision activities to be completed throughout school holidays. Sociology Homework in Sociology will include consolidation tasks to reinforce information learnt in lessons. It will also include written pieces such as timed essays and exam questions and reading and detailed note making in preparation for future lessons. Homework tasks will be set in order to complement the learning taking place in lessons and to prepare pupils for assessments and examinations. Students will receive between one and two tasks per week. Students may also be set homework or revision activities to be completed throughout school holidays.